wisdom creature gourd silk cotton tree thorny butternut squash hollowed

A Colour the pictures. Draw the missing pictures to finish the story.

1. Anansi the spider did not have very much wisdom. "I know," he said to himself one day, "if I collect all the wisdom in the village, I will be the wisest creature here."

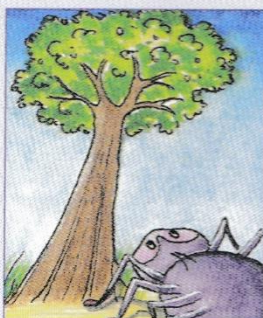

2. So Anansi decided to go from door to door and ask everyone to share their wisdom with him. He found a big gourd that he could carry with him and collect the wisdom in.

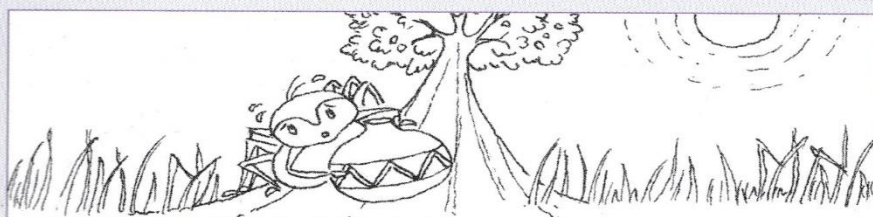

3. Everyone smiled at poor Anansi when they heard what he wanted. They happily shared their wisdom with him. They could see that Anansi needed this wisdom more than anybody else.

4. Anansi filled his gourd with all the wisdom he could carry. "I am now the wisest creature in the village. I must find a good hiding place for my wisdom or I might lose it."

5. Anansi looked round and spotted a silk cotton tree. "If I hide my wisdom high up in that very tall and thorny tree, no one will steal it from me," he thought.

6. Anansi held the gourd close to his body with two of his legs. He tried to climb the tree, but the gourd full of wisdom kept getting in the way and he could not climb.

7. Just as Anansi was getting fed up, his youngest son walked by. "What are you doing, Father?" asked the little spider. "I am climbing this tree with my gourd full of wisdom," Anansi said.

HISTORY

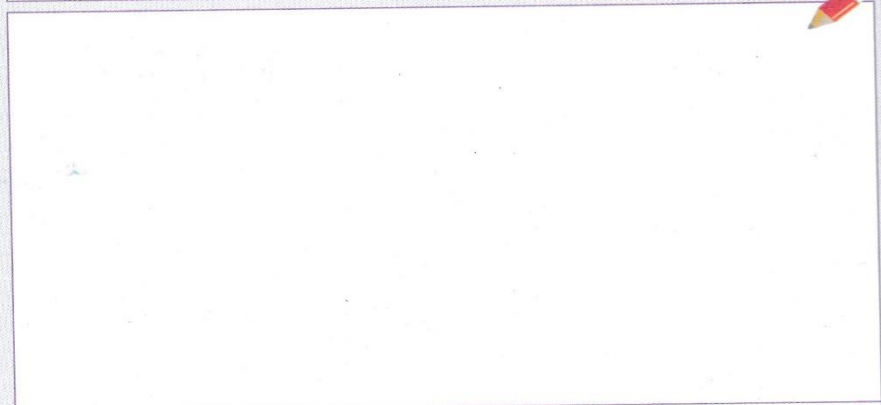

8. "But Father," said his son, "why don't you just tie the gourd to your back?" Anansi sat quietly for a very long time before saying, "Shouldn't you be going home now, son?"

9. Anansi waited until his son had left, and then he tied the gourd to his back and easily climbed up to the very top of the tree.

10. At the top, he cried out, "I have so much wisdom in this gourd, but still my youngest son is wiser than me."

11. Anansi lifted the gourd high over his head and all the wisdom spilled out into the wind. The wisdom blew away, far and wide.

12. Anansi knew then that wisdom is best if it is shared. And that is how wisdom came to the whole world.

B Answer these questions in your copy.

1. What kind of animal is Anansi?
2. Why did he want to collect some wisdom?
3. What did he use to collect the wisdom?
4. Why did everyone want to help Anansi?
5. What hiding place did he find for his gourd?
6. In what way did Anansi's son help Anansi?
7. What happened to the wisdom in the end?
8. What is the message of this story?

Hot Geography

A gourd is a fruit with a hard skin like a pumpkin or a butternut squash. If it is hollowed out and dried, it can be used as a container.
